This invention relates to bearing assemblies with axial load bearings. More specifically, this invention relates to a bearing assembly which has an improved bearing cage and seals for use in such bearing assemblies. Conventionally, bearing assemblies can be divided into axial bearing assemblies and radial bearing assemblies. An example of an axial bearing assembly is illustrated in FIG. 7. An axial bearing assembly 10 has an axially disposed, cylindrical bearing body 14 with an inner race 12 and an outer race 13. Bearing 12 and 13 are comprised of ceramic materials and set within metal housing 18. The bearing assembly 10 is designed to sustain an axial thrust load. Axial bearing assemblies such as that shown in FIG. 7 are used in military and aerospace applications. Radial bearing assemblies differ from axial bearing assemblies in that a radial bearing assembly is disposed in an axially extending annular race such as that shown in FIG. 8. Radial bearing assemblies are used in applications which require a bearing capable of sustaining a radial load without axial displacement. In a typical radial bearing assembly, a cylindrical outer race 28 is disposed in an
